

Artist Members Explain What Inspired Their Works of Art

In this presentation “Artist Members Explain What Inspired Their Works of Art” our knowledge and appreciation for the artists’ unique vision grows beyond measure. When artists share their creative insight they teach us there are a myriad of possible gateways for artistic expression to be conceived, come to fruition, and flourish. Specifically, their source of inspiration for individual works of art offers us valuable insight that may bring a new and expanded awareness to our viewing experience. Furthermore, we may learn about their core values, cultural influences, passions, and ultimately what sets them apart from all other artists.

To prepare this splendid presentation we asked all artist members — from all three online galleries — to choose two of their works of art from their pages and share with us what inspired them.

Sheldon Krevit

Enchantment, acrylic on canvas, 36'' x 36''

“I began work on Enchantment when I was living in Santa Fe, NM. It was the last painting I worked on before moving to CT. My paintings reveal themselves to me over time. Enchantment was one of those paintings that I had to set aside, from time to time, so that I could give it time to let me know what it required of me. That relatively long gestation period was worth it. I love this painting!”

Transcending The Blues, acrylic on panel, 18" x 24"

“This is more than the name I gave to this painting. It’s what I do when I paint or draw. My work is a form of meditation during which I set my ego aside. Whenever I’m at work, and my brush or drawing implement goes astray, or if I become hesitant, I know that my ego has somehow intruded. Artists must be fearless. When I commune with Transcending The Blues, I transcend the blues.”
